Save Those Pants!

(By "The Stroller")
Are there any old trouser legs in your home?
If the answer is yes, they make dandy bed-spreads.
That is the use to which Mrs. D. G. Hopkins, Torresdale, puts them. When trousers become worn, the sides of the legs, almost as good as new, are cut in long strips, washed and pressed. Then marked into squares, Mrs. Hopkins makes designs of wool flowers on each square, with roses here, lilies there, and snapdragons or pansies on another.

The result is so pleasing that some friends have been insisting that she have the spreads appraised by the hand-work department of a well-known department store.

Which just proves, there is nothing "unusable."

Ready With 50,000 Men To Aid Finland

Paris, Mar. 12—France and Great Britain have organized and equipped an expeditionary force of 50,000 men for immediate dispatch to Finland if a new appeal for aid is received. Premier Edouard Daladier told the Chamber of Deputies today. Stressing the fact that the troops are standing by in readiness for instant departure, Daladier pointed out that they could not be sent to Finland, "unless a request is received."

"Decision of this force has been made difficult by the fact that Sweden and Norway oppose it," the Premier said. "At a meeting on February 5th, the Allied Supreme Council decided to aid Finland with men. On February 26th, French troops were made ready, and departure concentrated at two points in France and Britain for their shipment to Finland." (Editor's Note: This announcement indicated that the Allies plan to aid Finland by landing an expeditionary force either at Petsamo, Finnish Arctic port, now in Russian hands or perhaps by essaying a landing at Murmansk, chief Polar Soviet port.)

All dispositions taken by the French army with regard to aid to Finland were made in complete agreement with Great Britain, Daladier said.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

"Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc."

Not As Pure As It Looks

Washington, Mar. 11. THE well-known gambling rule—"never give a sucker a break"—has a parallel in politics—"never concede the purity of an ambitious jobholder." This accounts for the refusal of practical politicians to accept the theory that in endorsing and appointing Dean Goodrich as Federal judge in Pennsylvania instead of one of the other less worthy aspirants, either the President or his Attorney General, Mr. Jackson, was inspired solely by the desire to elevate the bench.

ACTUALLY, there is solid ground for the belief that in this instance Mr. Roosevelt and his politically lustful young aide acted because being virtuous was not only easy but expedient. To have done anything else would have been bad policy in the best sense, but also bad politics in the worst sense. In a laudable effort to be fair to Mr. Jackson, whose extreme partisanship is his most serious defect as a public official, the eminent journalist, Mr. Arthur Krock, applauded the Goodrich appointment.

HE saw in it an indication that Mr. Jackson, who has spent much energy in nullifying the acts of his predecessor, Mr. Murphy, was now following out at least one of the major Murphy policies—to wit, that of supporting for judicial vacancies nonpartisan lawyers of high standing. His argument was that this isn't third-term politics—it isn't politics of any kind, and much to the credit of both Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Jackson. It may be noble thus to commend them, but it is not very sound. It seems inspired more by a strained desire to give them the benefit of every doubt than by a realistic view of

Unfinished Stockings Stolen at Silverdale

SILVERDALE, Mar. 12—Unfinished silk stockings valued at close to $4,000 were stolen over the week-end from the Silverdale Knitting Mill, Inc., a co-operative plant owned and operated by the employees. A week ago thieves robbed a Blooming Glen factory, stealing pants valued at close to $10,000.

Pennsylvania Motor Police of the Doylestown sub-station were called to the Silverdale factory Sunday noon after the theft had been discovered by Albert Hangey, a worker who went to the plant to repair his machine.

In addition to the 300 dozen silk stockings that were stolen, spool silk valued at $850 was stolen.

The police had no clue up until a late hour this morning that would give them any direct evidence. Entrance to the hosiery plant was made through a rear window that was forced open. In order to transport the stolen stockings the thieves must have used a truck or more than one automobile, police believe.

WAITING FOR THE FUNERAL

Predictions have been made frequently that if Russia could achieve a major victory and save her face, she would be willing to discuss peace terms. The prophets were at least partly right, but they were notoriously wrong in their implications concerning the nature of those terms. The Soviet government's terms are more far-reaching than those presented last autumn.

Acceptance by Finland of peace terms more drastic than the original offers made by Russia will be a major calamity. Not only will Stalin achieve all his objectives in Finland, including naval bases, islands and a part of the Karelian isthmus, but also other concessions undoubtedly placing the country under the complete domination of Russia.

If this will mean curtain for the democracy of Finland it will also represent a major defeat for the Allies and a blow to all democracies. For Finland is important both as a symbol of freedom and as a military and political objective. Incorporated into the northern bloc that bows to Stalin, she will make that northern front complete. And since Norway and Sweden obviously are acting, however grudgingly, as Germany wants them to, France and England will be faced with a solid line of hostile neutral or openly belligerent countries. The totalitarian countries will have consolidated their territorial gains and strengthened their economic structure.

The more effect on smaller independent nations may be tragic. They will not miss the significance; Ethiopia, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Albania, Poland, and now Finland. The stage appears to be set for the more terrible phase of the war many observers have predicted for this spring.

PASSING OF LITERARY GIANTS

The death of Edwin Markham, at the age of 88, two days after that of Hamlin Garland, is a poignant reminder that the ranks of American men of letters have been thinned by the passing of many outstanding figures in recent months.

Owen Wister, who sprang to fame with one novel "The Virginian," as Markham did with one poem, "The Man with the Hoe," Opie Read, Garland and Markham have been summoned by death in a relatively short space of time. And Zane Grey.

It is almost 50 years since Hamlin Garland made his presence known to literature America with "Main-Travelled Roads." Born in Wisconsin and raised in Iowa and South Dakota, he knew life in the new settlements and was able to translate it into simple, living prose. He dwelt on people of the land, their troubles, their joys and satisfactions, their attachment for the warm earth. He saw people through an artist's eyes that were also an historian's, for his first work and those which followed, dealing with the same scene and race, are documents certain to become sources of history in another day. His fiction was only removed from reality by the flavor of his art.

Born in Oregon in 1852, Markham lived in California most of his life. Late in life he moved to Staten Island, and eked out an existence on the lecture platform. Although Garland died before senility had crept up on him, the direction of his thoughts is betrayed in his last book, published last year: "The Mystery of the Buried Crosses," a record of his experiences in psychic research.

The CAIRO GARTER MURDERS

By VAN WYCK MASON

SYNOPSIS

Major Bruce Kilgour, of the British Intelligence Service, enlists the aid of Captain Hugh North, of the U. S. Army Intelligence, in solving several puzzling murders in Cairo. On the left arm of each victim was found a woman's red and black garter. The police believe the killings are connected with gun-running activities in Egypt. The killer is known by the pseudonym of "Mr. Armstrong." Aboard the S. S. Fort Lucknow en route to Cairo, Kilgour and North act as strangers. It has been arranged that North sit at the Captain's table with an interesting group whose acquaintanceship might prove valuable in Cairo. It consists of M. Lavasseur, a sardonic Frenchman; Dr. Larkin Ladd, Egyptologist and head of Lawrence College in Cairo, and his lovely daughter, Lolita; his friend, Daird Clark; Richard Follonsbee, salesman for Heineman and Schlager, arms manufacturers (Follonsbee claims he sells "sewing machines and reapers"); an exotic beauty, Natika Black; and Monsieur Phillipides, retired president of the Italo-Hellenic Chemical Works which manufacture poison gas. Dr. Ladd's wife, Zara, and an Egyptian, Ben Yamen Hasid Pasha, did not come to dinner, but North meets them afterwards. Follonsbee, obviously perturbed about something asks North to visit his cabin. Then comes news of another garter murder—the body of a German, named Wolff, was found in the desert. Follonsbee turns white. "I have a letter to Wolfe," he said thickly. Later, North goes to the salesman's cabin. He finds Follonsbee—bound and gagged—shot through the stomach and a garter on his arm! He rambles, "Confidential—Talcum—Shot me—Watched—Laughed—Millions in it—Pool 'em—A lot of money—She was beautiful—Cruel—Blue hand and dies." Searching for clues, North finds two charred pieces of cloth and a note reading: "Major Kilgour. Stick this in your pipe. Better get right." A knock comes to the door. North is relieved to see Kilgour. The latter had received a cable from Scotland Yard that the salesman was an Englishman and that Heineman and Schlager had chartered a freighter, the Lyda, which is loaded with ammunition for the Arabs. Follonsbee's muttered "Talcum" leads the detectives to a can of powder in which they discover a code for all war implements, grenades were called "butcher knives" and "three-inch nails" indicated 35-caliber pistol ammunition, etc. In the lining of a suitcase, they find the dead man's credentials. Just then, the stateroom's door handle rattles. "Hide!" whispers Kilgour. "We must not be seen together." The newcomer is Major Stag Melborne, soldier of fortune. He admits he had an appointment with Follonsbee to discuss gun-running. Stag and Kilgour leave the cabin.

CHAPTER XII

Inside the late Richard Follonsbee's door, Captain North listened considerably beyond his usual precautionary five minutes, then stepped out into the corridor. Very quickly he assumed a casual pose though he imagined a shadow had whisked around an adjacent corner. Listening, he caught the infinitely soft thud-thud of retreating feet. Now who the devil could that have been? With all his perceptions attuned to their most delicate sensitivity, North strolled out to the main staircase with the intention of regaining his cabin. At this hour, 1:45 A.M., the Fort Lucknow seemed a deserted ship. Never had Hugh North been less at ease. Had he been recognized, or had the prowler below fled without making an observation? No dodging the fact that this affair of the garter murders was momentarily assuming most serious possibilities, too much money was involved to keep the matter inconsequential. . . . Modishly he reviewed the situation to date. Regarding evidence he wasn't too badly off. Ah, that bit of cloth, how much would it disclose? And the garter? Surely something of interest could be deduced from evidence so bizarre.

A weird wrinkle, Mr. Armstrong's Order of the Cairo Garter. In his mind North pictured acquaintances made since boarding the liner: Lavasseur, sardonic and careful of his words; M. Phillipides, who said he was merely a retired business man; that oddly assorted couple, Dr. Larkin Ladd and his wife. Then there was Natika Black whose smooth girl's face screened a depth of experience betrayed through her eyes. And what of Ben Yamen Hasid Pasha, Melborne and Daird Clark? North turned into the passageway leading directly to his cabin. Shrouded in the passageway a gloom someone was standing in front of his cabin, hand on knob. For the life of him he could not decide whether his door had been opened or not.

"Ah, Captain North!" Natika Black still wore her white evening gown but had cast a jade-colored shawl over her shoulders. Certainly it formed a successful contrast to her red-brown hair. She gave him a cool, entirely matter-of-fact nod and declared, "Everywhere I have been looking for you. Are you not flattered? I even bribed a steward to show me your cabin."

"I am flattered and a little puzzled, too," was his startled admission. "Is there something I can do for you?"

"Yes, mon capitaine, you can give me something to drink and talk to me. I—I am uneasy, wakeful." Her reply was made without a trace of embarrassment and an appealingly frank smile curved her brilliant lips.

"In that case—" As if to bridge the delicacy of the moment, the Fort Lucknow plowed through a particularly vicious series of combers and sent Natika Black reeling sidewise into the steady arms of Captain North.

"We seem to be running into a pretty bad squall," he remarked drily.

"You would be sweet if you'd let me take refuge in your cabin—until the squall passes," Natika remarked, emitting that which sounded remarkably like a giggle. "I—I'm afraid I'll turn an ankle—or ruin a pair of evening slippers. I'll go as soon as the sea lessens, really I will."

"By all means come in, Miss Black; only you won't find my quarters very luxurious."

Once the lights were on, Natika Black seated herself in an easy chair, quietly inspecting his cabin and his single battered suitcase with its plethora of weatherbeaten hotel labels.

"You seem to have been everywhere," she said, holding up a bottle of liqueur.

He deemed it wise to postpone the introduction of leading questions as he studied her to the last detail. How she kept her hands, how she did her fingernails and how carelessly she smoothed rather full skirts over her knees. Full skirts? Under such an arrangement a girl might risk wearing decorated garters!

what M. Phillipides would say were he to pop up through a crack in the floor."

She sat up very suddenly. "I do not like Monsieur Phillipides. I am polite to him merely because he was once a friend of my father." And she spoke with such force that he was inclined to credit the statement. "He is too rich—too self-assured. Died Save me from the arrogance of the very rich! It is pure coincidence that we travel by the same boat, even more so that we sit at the captain's table!"

"Then we won't let him pop up through the floor!"

"You delightful idiot!" Natika smiled over the rim of her glass. "Why do you look so worried?"

"Your name, it intrigues me. You speak Greek like a native—and you might be one," North said. "But Black surely is not a Greek name?"

"Surely not," she admitted. "I am not Greek. I am English. I see you do not believe me, but it is so."

"Of course I believe you," he insisted after taking a sip of the liqueur. "Still, you must admit that you do not talk, act or dress like an English girl. You even have a trace of accent."

Very white teeth glinted to her light little laugh. "My father died when I was very young and I was brought up by my mother's people. I hope you will not like me any the less for it."

"On the contrary, mademoiselle," he continued in French, "you have the added attraction of the unfamiliar."

During the course of a conversation covering many subjects, he perceived this enigmatic young woman to be uncommonly well informed. She had, it came out, been everywhere in Europe and the Near East and it was a revelation to hear her mention names which were headline commonplaces.

"It is no doubt natural that you should wonder why I came here, mon capitaine."

"As a Chinese friend of mine observes, 'Curiosity is the most human and admirable of failings.' Surely it is not your custom to go calling at one P. X.?"

"It is not," she stated with such a touch of coldness he again debated whether he had surprised her in the act of entering or of leaving. Again, suppose she had, as she insisted, merely caught at the doorknob to steady herself?

"I like you, Captain"—she reverted to English—"and when I like people I tell them so; as readily as I do if they displease me. I wonder if you'd be good enough to answer a few questions and may I assure you they are not prompted by mere impertinence or idle curiosity?"

He made no reply merely flicked the ashes from his cigarette and continued to watch her expression.

"Have you heard that an English army intelligence officer is aboard?"

"It was a good act Hugh North put on. 'An intelligent English officer?' I'd love to see one. With the French or Italians during the war you could do something—they'd listen to a new idea, but to an Englishman—"

"You are sure you do not—" She hesitated and picked a bit of tobacco from the tip of a pink tongue. "That is—you are traveling for pleasure?"

"You are quite right, Miss Black. I'm on vacation from a stupid—er—law firm. My title is merely a courtesy one, a holdover from army days."

"Oh, a lawyer." North could read an evident relief. "That is good. Lawyers are so—so flexible, one might say." She was leaning forward now. "Then in Cairo you will only amuse yourself?"

"Exactly! And with as charming companions as fortune sends my way. I've had a very strenuous year, Miss Black. You can understand why I'm eager to find a sympathetic, lively someone."

She bent still further forward, her eyes wide and large. "Suppose it were possible to have just such a holiday and to make a good deal of money besides?"

"My dear girl, I won't deny I'd be delighted," said he.

The Great Game of Politics

the facts. The truth is that there are glaring cracks in the argument.

IN the first place, Mr. Murphy's alleged policy was more fanciful than real. It is true he did recommend a number of law-school deans, every one of whom was extravagantly ballyhooed and advertised. But it is also true that he indulged for the bench some extremely unfit men and some whose selection was wholly political. As an instance of the latter, the appointment of T. Alan Goldborough, of Maryland, is best known. In the second place, so great is the personal distaste of Mr. Jackson for Mr. Murphy that even if the latter had had a consistent policy such as is attributed to him, Mr. Jackson would have had difficulty in bringing himself to adopt it. Certainly, if he knew he was going to be publicly buttered for living up to the "Murphy standards" his revolt would be instant and energetic.

BOTH before and since he became Attorney General he has made no secret that his opinion of Mr. Murphy was very low, indeed. This has been reflected by the young and ardent New Deal columnists, whose affection for Mr. Jackson is so great that they heave with emotion when his name is mentioned. Since the unfortunate Mr. Murphy ascended to the Supreme Court, these writers have assailed him without mercy or restraint. Among other things, he has been depicted as a slacker, who absented himself from his post of duty to associate with the rich and socially prominent in Palm Beach and elsewhere. Friends of this holy man believe that the meanest parts of these attacks were inspired. They are convinced that they were due to resentment over his pious desire, expressed to his intimates, to remain Attorney General until certain conditions which he regarded as "awful" could be cleared up. This was construed as meaning that he feared his successor would do nothing to push these investigations to a conclusion. While White House pressure induced Mr. Murphy to abandon his plan and issue a statement disparaging his own "investigations," that did not ameliorate the wrath of the Jacksonites.

UNDER the circumstances, to commend Mr. Jackson for adopting a Murphy policy is well calculated to heighten his blood pressure and harden his arteries. Of course, in endorsing Dean Goodrich he was not, in the least, im-

ROHM & HAAS FIVE ELIMINATED FROM PLAY-OFF SERIES

Chemical Mixers Lose To Profy Team by Score of 40 to 34

SLAVEN LEADS TEAM

Radiomen's Guard Hit The Cords for Eight Double-Deckers

A new champion will be crowned in the Bristol Basketball League. This was made certain last night as Rohm and Haas, the 1938-39 winners, was eliminated from the play-off series, losing to the Profy team for the second time in a row. Final tabulations were: Profy's, 40; Rohm and Haas, 34.

It was a rather dramatic exit for the 1938-39 champs, for they just seemed to tire themselves out of the picture. For three-quarters of the game, they had a commanding lead which at most of the time was 10 points or thereabouts. But the final session saw a different Profy team come to life and leave the chemical workers behind.

Led by "Johnny" Slaven, former Bloomsburg State Teachers' College star, the radiomen scored 18 points in the final quarter while holding down the Rohm and Haas team to 7. It was this finish that made the Maple Beach aggregation fade from the playoffs which will begin Thursday night.

Slaven did yeoman's work during the entire game. Assigned to guard Ralph Cahall, the league's leading scorer, Slaven held him down to eight points and while doing this shook the cords for eight double-deckers and a pair of fouls himself or a total of 18 points.

It was Slaven who did the scoring but one cannot overlook the flashy work of that diminutive colored guard, Ray Dorsey. Dorsey broke up one-half of the Rohm and Haas plays and was in possession of the ball more than any player on either side. Despite his size, Dorsey seemed to be able to get the ball out of every scrum and by passing led to scores.

The game finished in grand style. Half-way in the final quarter the score stood tied at 30-30. Slaven sunk in a foul to give the Mill Streeters a one-point edge. But Joe Roe dribbled towards his basket and then shot and made good to put the chemical workers in the lead, 32-31. On a pass from Dorsey, Buck Profy counted near the basket and again Profy went ahead, 33-32.

The one-point lead looked good but Slaven decided it wasn't and taking a pass from Carnvale planted the ball through the loop to make it 35-32.

Ray Dorsey stepped into the picture and picking the sphere out of the scrumage dribbled close by and netted two more points, making it 37-32. Joe Roe added two more points to the Rohm and Haas total and before the final gun barked, Slaven again registered, both via the field and foul route.

High scorer for the losing quintet was Joe Roe who made a quartet of twin-pointers and six fouls for a total of 14 points. The chemical workers had a good night from the foul line, sinking in 10 of their eleven tries.

BRISTOL SCHOLASTICS TRIMS FALLSINGTON FIVE

Before the largest crowd of the season, the Bristol Scholastics trimmed the Fallsington Scholastics, 35-20, last night on the Italian Mutual Aid floor in the preliminary game played.

A last-quarter rally gave the Bristolians the victory as the Falls team was pressing throughout. During most of the first-half the boys of Jimmy Doherty had held a slight lead but faltered after the rest-period.

Bob Monti and Ted Fiorito with a trio of field goals each, led the Bristol Scholastics in scoring while Chet Felkner was high man for the Falls club.

Police Intensify Search For Men Who Shot De Caro slightly improved" today. The son, also shot in the abdomen at close range, was said to be in "good shape."

Police have questioned 15 members of the club who witnessed the shooting which occurred after the elder DeCaro accused four men of beating Dominick in the club last Saturday.

All four men drew pistols, but only one fired, witnesses said. Although Dominick D'Amico, manager of the association, told authorities he did not know the assailants, detectives said they know their identity and are endeavoring to learn where "they are hiding."

DeCaro was a former resident of Bristol, having at one time resided on Chestnut street. The elder DeCaro was arrested a number of times here but was always lucky enough not to have served a term in jail.

At the time of his last arrest he was given his choice by the Court of either serving a term in jail or "getting out of Bucks County and staying out of the County."

Regrading Streets In South Langhorne

ists had quite some trouble in pulling away from the curbs. This condition became more prevalent in icy weather. Another unfavorable condition brought on by the acute slope was the practice of parking several feet from the curb. This practice cut down the driving lane between the two lines of parked cars, and during the busy hours of the day, made traffic jam-ups frequent. The present plans will undoubtedly remedy this hazard.

A feature of the ordinance is the plan under which the work will be carried out. The present work on the curbing and sidewalks is being done at the expense of the borough. But under the Pierson Act recently passed by the State Legislature the labor on the project will be taken care of by the Department of Public Assistance. Borough Relief labor will in this way cut the costs from a probable $6,000 to the low figure of $2,900.

This is said to be the biggest project that has yet been undertaken by any borough in Bucks County under the Pierson Act. Heretofore relief work under the act has been limited to the sending in of two or three men to clean gutters or some other small labor. This project will give the Pierson Act a thorough test. It will no doubt give the State the chance to see whether the Act is worthwhile or not.

Following the completion of the borough's work on the curbing and gutters the State will immediately move in and begin the regrading and surfacing of the street. The borough will take approximately two months to complete their work and the State will take about the same period of time for the street work.

The work will cost about 50 cents per running foot against a probable $1 per running foot should the borough have to stand this expense rather than the State.

Former Sup't Enters Suit Against Perkasio

In October of the past year Mr. Murphy, it is alleged, demoted an employee at the plant after he had been advised by the chairman of the electric committee to withhold action until after the matter had been further investigated by the committee and by Council. At the November meeting Council was advised of the matter and after a lengthy discussion Mr. Murphy was given to understand that his resignation would be acceptable to Council. Mr. Murphy refused to resign and Council, acting upon the recommendation of the electric committee, dismissed him. The electric committee recommending the dismissal charged Murphy with "insubordination, refusal to accept full responsibility of operation of the plant, causing dissension among plant employees, inability to perform the duties of an engineer and other reasons."

Mr. Murphy appeared at the plant the following morning and remained on duty until formal written notice of Council's action was delivered to him through the mails. He then went to Doylestown and retained a Doylestown law firm to "protect his interests" and left town.

Mr. Murphy's salary at the time of his dismissal was $3500 annually. He had received a little more than two months of his annual salary when he was dismissed. He now seeks to collect the remainder of the year's salary.

Inform Italy of Phase of War

Rome, Mar. 12.—The first purpose of German Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop's visit to Rome was "to inform Italy of the phase of the war," Virgino Gayda declared in a newspaper today.

The Italian editor said that during his stay here, Von Ribbentrop discussed the Italo-German peace, Under-Secretary of State Welles, French and British reaction to the Russo-Finnish peace negotiations, Italo-Russian relations and the Balkan blockade situation.

Five Merchant Ships Lost

during the week ending March 10, an official British announcement said today. During the same period, according to the statement, not a single neutral vessel was sunk.

BLAMES POOR EYESIGHT

STATE COLLEGE, Mar. 12--(INS)--Parents whose children have low grades on report cards sometimes have only themselves to blame, says Dr. Emmett A. Betts, research professor in elementary education in charge of the reading-clinic at the Pennsylvania State College. "Parents may believe in having teeth checked twice each year and in protection against colds, but it appears that eyesight in general is badly neglected," Dr. Betts explained. He added that poor eyesight very often is a cause of poor grades.

INCREASE HERD VALUE

STATE COLLEGE, Mar. 12--(INS)--Membership in Pennsylvania's 74 co-operative bull associations has increased the value of the herds of the members by more than $100,000, according to R. R. Welch, dairy extension specialist with the Pennsylvania State College. "The object of bull associations is to aid in establishing better breeding practices on dairy farms through the co-operative purchase and use of sires with a known inheritance of high milk production," Welch explained. "The added value of the 4,588 daughters of association sires is at least $25 each, or a total of $114,700."

ELECTRIFIED FARMS

HARRISBURG, Mar. 12--(INS)--Although 17 States have a greater number of occupied farms, Pennsylvania ranks fourth in the nation in the number of electrified farms, according to the State Department of Commerce. Secretary of Commerce Richard P. Brown declared that the swing to electricity came to Pennsylvania farms only within the past 10 years. More than 102,000 of the State's farms, Brown revealed, are now served by power lines. In 1930, only 45,421 farms had electricity. With farms having their own power plants, Brown estimated the total of electrified farms in the State at 110,000.

SEE WHAT THE YARDSTICK SAYS ABOUT BIGNESS!

The Ford V-8 has the most compact engine and the longest springbase among all low-priced cars. So, inside the body, where bigness counts, it's not surprising to discover these facts:

A Inside length, windshield to rear window, is 100 1/4 inches; actually greater than some cars substantially higher in price!

B Rear seat knee room exceeds that in either of the other two leading low-priced cars. (Measurements taken in 4-door sedans, with front seat adjusted all the way back!)

C Rear seat passengers in a Ford ride farther ahead of the rear spring center, toward the center of the car where riding quality is best, than passengers in any other car at the price!

Who Invented the MOUSETRAP?

You've often heard the old adage: "Let a man make a better mousetrap, and the world will make a beaten path to his door."

But have you ever happened upon that path, or even looked for it?

Why should you, when the people who today have things to sell beat a path to your door to tell you about them?

Every newspaper that comes into your home brings you a new list of what you can get, and where. You can do your shopping in the advertising pages—instead of beating a path from store to store to find what you want.

Make it a habit to look over the advertisements, and you'll find many fine values you might have missed... many exciting and useful things you otherwise might never have known about!
